PLANO, Texas (February 4, 2019) – Putting a spotlight on the journey just as much as the destination, Toyota’s all-new RAV4 marketing campaign, “What If?”, invites consumers to do more thanks to the capability and the confidence that comes from driving the all-new 2019 Toyota RAV4.

The “What If?” campaign for Toyota’s current best-selling vehicle in the U.S. features three of the 2019 RAV4 grades – XSE HV (Hybrid), Limited and Adventure grade – highlighting the RAV4’s ability to tackle the urban, suburban and great outdoors with ease.

“The all-new RAV4 redefines the meaning of adventure, a narrative that comes to life through the ‘What If?’ campaign,” said Ed Laukes, group vice president, Toyota Marketing, Toyota Motor North America. “The RAV4 is back like never before as it breaks the mold for the segment it helped create 23 years ago.”

The fully-integrated campaign was developed under Total Toyota (T<sup>2</sup>), a cohesive marketing approach, inclusive of multicultural marketing, bringing together its agencies into a total market model called Total Toyota or T<sup>2</sup>. The Total Toyota team includes Saatchi & Saatchi, Burrell Communications, Conill Advertising and interTrend, with Zenith placing TV and outdoor media buys.

Here’s a glimpse of the creative by agency:

- Saatchi & Saatchi – “Missed It,” featuring indie folk band, Fleet Foxes, was directed by Markus Walter of Reset. The spot depicts a young couple at the airport in which the girl misses her flight in order to stay behind. They make a journey out of it in their RAV4.
- Burrell Communications – “Bring the Heat,” directed by Markus Walter of Reset, follows a group of foodie friends who are looking for the hottest restaurants in town, delving outside their comfort zone. As they do, a classic soul track comically acts as the soundtrack to their misadventure to introduce the all-new RAV4. In “Fanatics,” which will go live in the Spring, a group of hoop fanatics fed up with their favorite team go on an epic search to find a winner and discover happiness in the unlikeliest of places thanks to the all-new RAV4 Hybrid.
- Conill Advertising – In “Late,” a group of friends arrive fashionably late to a party and take their all-new RAV4 on a detour to some fun adventures. In a second spot “Cousins” that will go live in the Spring, a simple proposition like, “What if you meet my family now?” becomes a multi-stop road trip across the country in the all-new RAV4. The spots were directed by Ida Cuéllar.
- interTrend – Directed by Manes Duerr is “Fort,” in which a hero takes on the challenge of building the ultimate doghouse with the help of the all-new RAV4 and “Hooked,” in which a tranquil fishing day turns into a thrilling experience thanks to the all-new RAV4.

Toyota’s return to the 2019 Super Bowl kicked off the “What If?” campaign with a spotlight on two game-changers – the all-new RAV4 Hybrid and powerhouse female football player Antoinette “Toni” Harris. The spot, “Toni,” narrated by sportscaster Jim Nantz, features 22-year-old Detroit native Toni Harris, the first female collegiate football player to play a non-specialist position. Directed by legendary Super Bowl director Joe Pytko, who has directed more than 80 Super Bowl commercials, “Toni” was Pytko’s first time working with Toyota. Burrell Communications created and produced Toni’s story, with additional support from both Saatchi & Saatchi and Zenith Media.
