

Toyota Takes Out the Trash

April 22, 2014

Image not found or type unknown

TORRANCE, Calif. (April 22, 2014) – Imagine lugging more than 1.9 million trash cans to the curb on trash day. That’s what Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., Inc. (TMS) has avoided doing over the last four years. Since 2009, Toyota has reduced or avoided 1.9 million trash cans worth of waste at its sales and logistics facilities across the country.

This month, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) recognized Toyota's efforts with the 2013 WasteWise Large Business Partner of the Year award. This title marks the second time TMS has received the Large Business Partner of the Year designation and fourth consecutive year Toyota sales and logistics facilities have received a WasteWise award. The EPA program recognizes organizations' efforts to reduce refuse, increase recycling and purchase environmentally preferable products.

"Toyota focuses on continually improving how we do business," says Chris Reynolds, TMS chief environmental officer. "By reducing waste and increasing efficiency, we save environmental resources and lower costs for both Toyota and our customers."

Collectively over the past four years, TMS facilities recycled or avoided production of more than 304 million pounds of trash and consistently diverted 98 percent of their annual waste stream from landfill and incineration. How much trash is that? That's equal to the weight of 1,843 Endeavor space shuttles. Tow that Tundra!

To accomplish this feat, Toyota has to think outside the box. For example, when North American Parts Center, Kentucky (NAPCK) delivery trucks drop off parts to the regional parts distributions centers, they're loaded with plastic bags and plastic stretch wrap for the return trip to NAPCK. These types of plastics are often difficult to recycle, but the parts center sells the bulk plastic to a nearby manufacturer that uses recycled wood and plastic to make composite patio materials. From dreck to deck.

Toyota joined the WasteWise program in 2009, and in 2010 received the Waste Reduction in the Workplace Gold Honorable Mention Award, followed by Large Business Partner of the Year honors in 2011. Last year, Toyota was named the honorable mention, Large Business Partner of the Year.

The WasteWise program is a voluntary partnership program sponsored by the U.S. EPA to help organizations achieve cost savings, improve efficiency and reduce their climate footprint through waste reduction. Partners range from large and small businesses to nonprofit organizations to federal, state, local and tribal governments.

###