In the fight against COVID-19, many of us are wondering how we can best help. It's no different at Toyota, where several areas of the company are pitching in to assist communities and people on the pandemic's front line.

The Toyota Production System Support Center (TSSC) is just one of many departments finding new ways to collaborate in this crisis. And it makes perfect sense. Since 1992, TSSC has worked with business partners, disaster relief groups and health care providers to share Toyota Production System principles and know-how.

Check out this video to learn more about their mission, and how they help organizations across America embrace the culture of continuous improvement, or as Toyota calls it, kaizen.
