

Toyota's Tom Stricker Talks About Company's Environmental Plans and Efforts in Invest.Green Podcast

July 13, 2022

Image not found or type unknown

Invest.Green, a media organization that provides proprietary research to both individual investors and their advisors, will feature Toyota Motor North America's (Toyota) Tom Stricker, group vice president of Sustainability and Regulatory Affairs to discuss why investors should consider Toyota in their latest podcast episode. In the episode, Invest.Green co-founders, executive chairman Dr. Matthew Kiernan and CEO Andrew McLean, introduce Stricker and discuss for a period of about thirty minutes various topics centering on why investors should consider Toyota as part of their investment portfolios. During the interview, Stricker talks about managing environmental issues over the past 35 years via 5-year environmental action plans and where Toyota sees its competitive advantages. The full episode, published today, can be found and listened to here.

Toyota also provided Invest.Green exclusive access to its entire line of electrified vehicles, including the Hydrogen-powered fuel cell electric Mirai and battery-all-electric bZ4X. See their video analysis here.

About Invest.Green

Invest.Green's mission is to encourage retail investment in the Green sector by making its world class research available to retail investors. The company's website, <https://invest.green> provides market intelligence, interviews and insights curated by a team which has twice been ranked #1 in the world for research in this sector. Invest.Green provides Proprietary Analysis and easy to digest, institutional quality research with its Green Research Bites (TM), videos and podcast:

<https://open.spotify.com/show/1msOEfMFCrVSObnXdvasbr?si=2b9077efe5f74f70>